

Giscard Calls for Bringing PLO Into Mideast Peace Negotiations

By Joseph Fitchett

PARIS, March 9 (UPI) — Publicly confirming a French policy shift that has pleased Arab governments and angered Israel, President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing today called for the Palestine Liberation Organization to be included in Arab-Israeli peace negotiations.

Diplomats said today that the French leader's call — made yesterday in a banquet speech in Amman, Jordan — is the nearest approach yet to recognition of the PLO by a major Western leader. They linked it with the French advocacy last week of Palestinian self-determination, a position apparently implying support for a Palestinian state.

Other Common Market governments — including West Germany, Britain and Italy — have supported Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's statements, which diplomats say reflect pro-Palestinian momentum that has developed in Western Europe in recent months.

Although Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's statements do not go substantially beyond previous scattered Common Market declarations, the blaze of publicity around his remarks on his Mideast trip could foreshadow a French-led Mideast initiative next summer if the current Israel-Egypt talks fail to produce agreement on Palestinian autonomy by the May 26 deadline, diplomats said.

U.S. Leverage

However, they said that Arab and European governments both want to avoid playing a spoiler role in the negotiations. Arab diplomats acknowledge that only the United States has any significant leverage over Israeli policy.

The exact extent of the French policy shift remains to be clarified, but Arab officials express satisfaction with his statements in the Gulf, on which France depends for almost all its oil.

PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat said, "France has made Europe take the first step toward a Middle East solution." In an interview yesterday with the Paris newspaper, Le Monde, he said that French policy would have an impact on economic relations between the Arabs and Western Europe.

Israel has bitterly criticized Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's proposals, which it says threaten to undermine the autonomy negotiations.

Butros Ghali, the Egyptian minister of state for foreign affairs, said, "Any assistance to the Palestinian people is helpful to Egypt's line of diplomacy."

The Carter administration has not reacted to the French statements, but European diplomats — many of whom are skeptical about the U.S.-sponsored talks' chances of success — play down the risk of U.S.-European friction over the Palestinian issue.

"The Carter administration secretly may be glad to have some extra pressure on Israel," a diplomat said in Paris, adding, "It may also like having another Western proposal in play next summer, while the United States is paralyzed by electoral fever."

A diplomat in London added: "We are all thinking along the same lines, particularly since we realized that lack of Western movement on the Palestinian issue is the biggest obstacle to effective Arab help in opposing the Soviet Union after Afghanistan."

Several sources noted that Britain and West Germany already have used very similar language about the Palestinians, but without the high political visibility of the French president. "It was brilliant public relations," a European diplomat said. His comment reflected a feeling reported in several Common Market capitals that France will reap much of the political and economic benefit from what is in fact a European trend.

European diplomats are known to be discussing an idea floated by Britain of a new United Nations resolution recognizing the Palestinians' political rights in exchange for PLO recognition of Israel. This approach has been attempted twice before, but U.S. and Arab representatives have never agreed on a formula.

In contrast to UN Security Council resolution 242, which refers to the Palestinians simply as "refugees," Mr. Giscard d'Estaing stressed French recognition of the Palestinians as a distinct people.

Mr. Arafat, asked what he expects now, said that he is waiting for an official invitation to visit France. However, French policy is to make his visit contingent on a notable PLO concession — either the dismantlement of guerrilla bases in southern Lebanon or a step toward recognition of Israel.

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's statements stopped short of recognizing the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinians.

He said in Amman: "All the interested parties must be involved in [Mideast] negotiations, including the Palestinian people, which implies the participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization." The United States has barred a PLO role until the organization recognizes Israel's right to exist.

The new French approach appears to go beyond the Camp David framework in several respects about the Palestinians. While the U.S.-backed Israel-Egypt accord makes provision for autonomy in the West Bank and Gaza Strip areas, "self-determination within the framework of a negotiated peace settlement" applies to all Palestinians, including those living in Lebanon, Jordan and other Arab countries.

On Friday the Israeli government officially protested European advocacy of self-determination, asserting that it means the Palestinians have a right to a state. Tel Aviv has consistently rejected any allusion to self-determination for the Palestinians, using instead the term "administrative autonomy."

Israelis preferred the previous French position in favor of a Palestinian homeland, because in their view it could mean settling the Palestinians in Jordan. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's continued use yesterday of the word "homeland" could indicate that France still hopes for a federation between a Palestinian entity and Jordan, Arab diplomats said in Paris.

Claim to Territory

Western diplomats agreed that most Palestinians appear to want an independent state, but the French position remains open to interpretation because self-determination implies a claim to a definite territory — an issue still debated by the PLO.

Some Palestinians are ready to settle for a mini-state in the West Bank and Gaza, but radicals are holding out for the PLO's original claim to all Israel — a position that France does not support.

After protests in Paris by Jewish organizations, French diplomats stressed France's continued commitment to Israel. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing said yesterday that a settlement should include security guarantees for all the states in the region from the four Western powers and the Soviet Union.

The thrust of recent speeches, however, shows that Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, who entered office in 1974 as a supporter of Israel with an antipathy in the PLO, has moved closer to the pro-Arab policy espoused by the late President de Gaulle.

the flag of détente abroad while strengthening the militarization of the economy and military-industrial complex at home. The dangers of this development to the world are obvious.

Q. Do you think the Soviet leadership will continue to be interested in agreements on the limitation of strategic weapons with the United States and Western Europe, and do you think that a SALT-3 agreement will be signed in the next decade?

A. In their imperialist designs for expansion, the leadership of the Soviet Union is playing a complicated and dangerous game. But I do not think they are crazy, at least not at this stage in history.

Everybody, I sincerely hope, wishes to avoid the destruction of the human race through thermonuclear war. This is the basis for the movement toward disarmament, which is complicated and slow because it constantly runs into a wall of mistrust and attempts to achieve one-sided advantage. But still, the forward movement continues. I consider the SALT-2 agreement a definite achievement; it is carefully worked out from a technical point of view and contains within it possibilities for future progress and possibilities for the restoration of balance in those areas where balance has been upset.

In the Soviet press, they often make attempts to describe me as an enemy of détente, disarmament and SALT. In reality, I consider that averting thermonuclear war has absolute priority over all other problems of our time.

Q. How can the United States and other countries show their united opposition to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan?

A. One hundred and four countries already have demonstrated their position [of opposition] at the United Nations General Assembly meeting. This has enormous significance. At closed and open meetings, the countries which condemn the invasion may work out a general program of further economic, ideological and military measures and firmly pursue it.

Q. What special thoughts would you like to convey to U.S. readers?

A. I think that the critical situation in the world today places special responsibilities not only on America, but on all the countries of the Western, European countries, under the pretext of political independence from the United States, or in pursuit of a particular economic or political interest, do not support the general trend of opposition to totalitarianism. In these cases they often speak of their wish to preserve the achievements of détente or something of this kind. But in fact, this contribution to anti-American prejudice and political intrigue of the moment does great harm to the long-term interests of the given country and the world.

Turning especially to Americans — among whom my children and grandchildren live — I think first of all of the democratic traditions of the American people, of their steadfastness and love of life. The latest events in Iran, Afghanistan and other parts of the world have posed a serious challenge above all to America.

The Americans, their government and their president have honorably answered this challenge. Let the rest follow their lead.

The nuclear station at Plogoff was first discussed several years ago between the EDF and various government ministries. In a second stage in 1976, elected officials at the regional level were consulted on the technical and economic feasibility of the project and its acceptability in terms of safety and environmental impact.

The project is now in its third stage, with the EDF conducting what it calls a "public inquiry." The nuclear proposals were supposed to have been left in town halls within a three-mile radius of Plogoff for six weeks to allow local residents to register their opinions. The EDF is then expected to issue written responses in their comments.

Even if all the local residents express disapproval of the nuclear station, the EDF and the government would not feel bound to abandon the project. As a result, the public inquiry has become the focus of local protests.

"I asked the national government to let us hold a referendum on the nuclear plans four years ago," said Jean-Marie Kerloc'h, mayor of Plogoff. "They turned me down. And now they are trying to use the public inquiry to pretend that they are consulting the local population."

Labeling the inquiry a "sham," the mayors of Plogoff and the other neighboring communities have refused to allow the inquiry to take place in their town halls. The government and the EDF have countered by setting up trailers with nuclear protection where the nuclear plans are on exhibit.

The inquiry is scheduled to end Friday. And the subsequent withdrawal of the police forces will probably restore a temporary calm in Plogoff. But the community seems certain to resume its rebellion if the nuclear project receives government approval.

"I cannot see why certain minorities, because they are more vocal and noisy in the streets, should have more weight than the whole population," said Mr. Giraud, the Minister of Industry, asserting that a final decision would take into consideration the needs of the whole of Brittany.

Draft Call Said to Portend Spring Offensive

Afghan Rebel Group Offers Peace Talks

NEW DELHI, March 9 (UPI) — An Afghan rebel leader yesterday offered to meet Soviet officials to negotiate a peace settlement in Afghanistan and avert a spring offensive by the occupying Russian forces.

M. Amin Wakman, leader of one of the half dozen major rebel groups, made the offer after the Soviet-installed regime of Babrak Karmal issued a draft call for what diplomats said would probably be a offensive to wipe out rebel resistance.

Interviewed in New Delhi, Mr. Wakman admitted that, as the heavy snows begin to melt, the 75,000-man Soviet occupation army in Afghanistan would be able to deploy more tanks and heavy artillery against the rebels' mountain strongholds. But he said that fair weather should also work to the rebels' advantage, allowing them to move more freely across a terrain they know better than the Russians.

"I am ready to talk to any man, anywhere, anytime," said Mr. Wakman, whose Social Democrat Party claims to have 12,000 followers.

Kabul Report Quoted

Travelers returning to New Delhi from Kabul yesterday reported that the capital was quiet but was firmly held by the Soviet occupation forces. "Everything is normal. All the shops are open. There is no looting, no problem right now. But people are not happy," a traveler said.

"All the bridges are being controlled by Russians. By 6:30 p.m. the whole bazaar closes because people are anxious to get home before darkness in case trouble starts. The moment continually says be good. Don't cause trouble," the traveler reported.

He said that Soviet jet fighters and helicopters patrolled over the capital Friday and that, while some semblance of normality had returned to everyday life, meat prices have doubled and most essential commodities are scarce.

The Radio Kabul broadcast of the draft call said that all eligible

Afghans 21 years old and over must report for possible military duty by next Saturday.

The broadcast, monitored in New Delhi, said, "Special attention should be drawn in completing the formation of the battle force, border units, police units."

Defections Claimed

In another development, Mujahideen rebel officials in Peshawar, Pakistan, claimed today that Afghan Army troops near rebel-controlled areas were confined at night and their weapons locked away to prevent them from defecting.

The rebel officials said their men in Afghanistan sent word by that 58 Afghan soldiers deserting from two districts in the north, and that 23 were taken together, brought with 25 Soviet-made Kalashnikov automatic submachine guns and rounds of ammunition.

"These men told us that number of Afghan soldiers, like to defect but that it made very difficult," a spokesman said. "They said the troops being confined at night and have orders to stay in any place, the barracks or field camp," he said. "The men's weapons locked away at night."

Iran Militants Again Set On Shift of U.S. Hostage

der the hostages they seized Nov. 4 to the ruling council, only to be taken down by claiming Mr. Ghotbzadeh had deceived them into thinking that Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini had authorized the transfer.

It was the militants themselves who Thursday proposed the handover after saying that they were unable to comply with a Revolutionary Council order that they allow the UN commission to make a humanitarian visit to all the hostages.

As he left a meeting of the Revolutionary Council tonight, Mr. Ghotbzadeh said that the militants had to decide by tomorrow whether they were going to hand over the hostages or allow the international commission to see them. He said that a schedule for the transfer definitely would be fixed tomorrow.

Action Criticized

Mr. Ghotbzadeh criticized the captors for their action, saying it exposed their behavior to the nation. In addition to their two demands, he said, the militants also want Mr. Ghotbzadeh to acknowledge that the moment the American custody of authorities, neither is responsible for the Paris said.

Mr. Ghotbzadeh charged demand for a prior radio he was aimed at inducing a go to the embassy so the could claim they had the hostages. Pars said, "Foreign Ministry must of a behavior of the students of the great Iranian nation the of how the problem is."

The UN commission in Tehran today to deal next step. The panel of lawyers was scheduled to meet late today with Mr. Ghotbzadeh.

Spokesman Hassan Haini last night that the Revolutionary Council had agreed the best for the hostages was inside. He said the Iranian government would take responsibility for the Americans, he said.

The government has said fate of the Americans will be decided by the new Majlis, or parliament, not expected to convene for month. Ayatollah Khomeini issued a ruling to that effect.

In another development, Sunday Times of London said that the United States has grave concern over the Iranian government over reports that a blast among the militants might kill some or all of the hostages.

The newspaper said that a message from Washington requesting assurances that the Iranian government would take steps to any such action.

Sunday Times' Mohammed Heikal wrote: "Washington message warning to the hostages would be a double setback to the stability region."

It also warned that such would "upset relations Tehran and Washington from time, and would increase on the image of the Iranian nation," Mr. Heikal reported.

Carter Rules Out Apology To Gain Hostages' Release

In 1953, he called the subject "ancient history" and declined to discuss it.

Mr. Bani-Sadr has laid down three conditions for the freeing of the hostages. One is that the United States pledge never again to interfere in Iran's internal affairs, which Mr. Carter has publicly done. The second is that the United States accept Iran's right to seek the return of the deposed shah, which, according to officials, can be worked out.

The real stumbling block has been the Iranian demand for "self criticism" by the United States that the president approached yesterday in suggesting that an expression of concern is as far as he is willing to go.

Mr. Carter said that he does not believe the United States was hoodwinked by the Iranians when it agreed to support the UN commission that is in Iran to investigate Iranian grievances. He said he does not know if any of the hostages has been harmed.

Called Honest Mistake

Mr. Carter's view of the controversy over the UN vote censuring Israel is that it was an honest mistake for which he, as the government's chief executive, must bear the ultimate responsibility.

The UN Security Council resolution censured Israel for establishing settlements in occupied Arab territories and called for the settlements to be dismantled. The United States voted for the resolution, but at the same time disassociated itself from the demand for dismantlement.

But last Monday, two days after the vote, the White House disavowed the resolution, asserting that because of a communications foul-up Mr. Carter had not known that the resolution also dealt with the status of Jerusalem.

He said that he had no choice but to disavow the resolution because it violated an understanding reached at the Camp David Middle East summit conference to have the status of Jerusalem settled by negotiations, keeping it free of controversy at the United Nations.

In ordering support for the resolution, it was his intention only to signal Israel of continued U.S. opposition to establishment of settlements in the occupied territories, he said.

Mr. Carter gave this description of the events surrounding the UN episode:

On Feb. 29, the day before the vote, he orally instructed Mr. Vance

Police Arrested In Lagos Deaths

NIAMEY, Niger, March 9 (Reuters) — Five Nigerian policemen and an investigating magistrate have been arrested after the deaths in Lagos of 50 prisoners in a police van meant to hold 20. Niger Interior Minister Tanja Mamadou said yesterday.

The minister, speaking on his return from a fact-finding trip to Lagos, said that 35 of the dead were reported that six were Ghanaians.

Carter Signals Acceptance Of Higher Unemployment

chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, who said that the administration had to accept higher unemployment.

"I don't think we should say that," Sen. Byrd replied when asked about Mr. Schultz's statement, but he added, "it may occur."

Unemployment, which stood at 8 percent when Mr. Carter took office in 1977, was a principal issue of his campaign against President Ford in 1976. It continued to be a high priority item in the first part of Mr. Carter's term, but became less of an issue in the last year, both because it leveled off at about 6 percent and the inflation rate steadily increased.

The government's wholesale price index figures released Friday showed a 1.5 percent increase for February, pushing the inflation rate to 19.9 percent. At the same time, the unemployment rate dropped from 6.2 percent to 6 percent.

Mr. Carter, who has been meeting with Democratic and Republican leaders in Congress to try to reach a consensus on a program to combat inflation, declined to specify what action might be taken or exactly when he would announce the program.

Assad Is Quoted As Saying Syria Ready for Israel

KUWAIT, March 9 (UPI) — Syrian troops are ready to confront Israel, Syrian President Hafez al-Assad said in an interview published here yesterday by the newspaper Al-Rai Al-Amm.

"Syria will not hesitate to confront Israel. It will also not surrender to any pressures, threats or even Israeli military actions," Mr. Assad said.

Mr. Assad defended his government's decision to redeploy Syrian troops from Beirut and other Lebanese areas to the Bekaa Valley of eastern Lebanon, used as an air corridor by Israeli planes in the 1967 and 1973 wars. He said the move was made to bolster his military stand.

Syrian officials have accused Israel of planning a major offensive against the Syrians, saying that the Syrians would stand up to any such move.

Mr. Assad attacked the Egyptian-Israeli rapprochement and said it was because of its possible consequences that Syria had decided to move its troops in Lebanon. The withdrawal from East Beirut started on Friday.

Cuban Prisoners Mistreated, Says in Report

WASHINGTON, March 9 (UPI) — An Organization of American States report says there are 1,000 political prisoners in Cuba, some of whom suffer from inadequate diet and lack of attention. The 49-page report, OAS Human Rights Commission, on Human Rights in Cuba, said that the Cuban government could not determine the number of prisoners because it refused to cooperate with the commission's inquiries. Its estimate of 1,000 is based on public statements by Cuban officials. Some of the prisoners are political prisoners, some are prisoners of conscience, and some are prisoners of war.

The report said most of the prisoners are in the provinces, where they are held in conditions that are inhumane and inhumane. Refused to Back Treaty With Egypt

Shamir, a Rightist, Named Israel's Foreign Minister

William Claiborne

JERUSALEM, March 9 (WP) — Yitzhak Shamir, the fiercely right-wing speaker of Israel's parliament who refused to support the Camp David peace treaty because it meant abandoning Jewish settlements in the Sinai Peninsula, today was named by Prime Minister Menachem Begin to be Israel's sixth minister of foreign affairs.

Mr. Shamir, 65, will fill the vacancy left by the abrupt resignation last October of Moshe Dayan in a dispute over what Mr. Dayan termed the Likud government's inflexible position in the negotiations for the future of the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The Israeli Cabinet is expected to formally endorse Mr. Shamir in a special meeting tomorrow, after which the Knesset, Israel's parliament, would confirm the appointment. The Foreign Ministry portfolio has been held for the last five months by Mr. Begin on an acting basis.

Mr. Shamir, onetime commander of the underground Stern Gang and a rival of Mr. Begin's in the struggle against the British mandatory authority in Palestine, will bolster the hawkish wing of the Likud's Cab-net at a time when Israel's policies in the occupied territories are coming under increasing fire from the United Nations and the European Economic Community.

A self-described revisionist Zionist, Mr. Shamir is an outspoken advocate of Israel's biblical right to build civilian settlements in territory seized during the 1967 six-day war. When he abstained on the Knesset vote ratifying the peace treaty last year, Mr. Shamir, as speaker, offered a respectable cover for dissenters who had been regarded on the edge of rationality during the post-Camp David peace euphoria that swept Israel.

But it remained unclear tonight whether Mr. Begin intends to restore to the Foreign Ministry any of the power he stripped away over the last two years, thereby encouraging Mr. Dayan's resignation. Mr. Begin entrusted the crucial Palestinian autonomy negotiations to Interior Minister Yosef Burg and most matters dealing with southern Lebanon to Defense Minister Ezer Weizman, leaving the Foreign Ministry with little more than routine diplomatic chores. As a result, Mr. Begin retained tight charge, but the ministry has slipped into a state of disarray and low morale among its career diplomats.

In an interview, Mr. Shamir seemed to be sensitive to the malaise in the Likud government in the face of sagging popularity in opinion polls and the worsening economic situation in Israel, where inflation is at 111 per cent annually.

"There are big differences for us, because we do not have any experience in government," Mr. Shamir said, referring to the Herut Party, which is the nucleus of the Likud. "Maybe we arrived at these positions too late. All of us, the leading group, are not young anymore. Maybe it would have been better if we had come in 10 years earlier. But we must do the best with it," he added.

Autonomy Talks Reportedly Raised

Carter Met Israel's Envoy Before UN Vote Disavowal

WASHINGTON, March 9 (WP) — Ambassador Ephraim Evron of Israel met with President Carter last Monday shortly before the start of a top-level White House meeting that ended with Mr. Carter repudiating a U.S. vote criticizing Israel in the United Nations, according to administration and diplomatic sources.

Israeli Cabinet Again Postpones Move on Hebron

JERUSALEM, March 9 (WP) — For the fourth time in as many weeks, the Israeli Cabinet today postponed its plans to implement a decision in principle to allow Jewish civilian settlers to move into the center of the exclusively Arab city of Hebron in the West Bank.

The Cabinet, which is divided on the issue, delayed its vote at the request of the Liberal faction of the ruling Likud government, whose leadership wants to consider the measure this week.

Housing Minister David Levy has prepared extensive plans to rebuild a number of houses that were Jewish-owned before the 1929 Arab riots in Hebron, in which 67 Jews were massacred and the remainder fled.

The new Hebron settlement is opposed by the United States and by UN Security Council resolution.

The sources confirmed Friday the Evron-Carter meeting after reports began circulating that day that the Israeli ambassador went to the White House Monday night and may have had a role in suggesting the language of the statement issued by Mr. Carter at 10 p.m. Monday.

In his sig to the sources, though, Mr. Evron's session with Mr. Carter, arranged by Vice President Mondale, took place around 4:30 p.m. Monday and was confined to the ambassador restating Israel's objections to the UN Security Council resolution for which the United States had voted two days earlier.

The U.S. vote was intended to register a protest against Israel's policy of establishing Jewish settlements in occupied Arab territories. In his statement Monday night, Mr. Carter said that because of a misunderstanding between himself and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, he was unaware that the resolution contained references to the status of Jerusalem that the United States considered unacceptable. As a result, Mr. Carter accepted, the United States should have abstained from the UN vote.

Speculation for Reversal

Although Mr. Vance subsequently accepted responsibility for what was termed "the failure in communication," the incident has raised speculation about possible other reasons for Mr. Carter's reversal of position. Much of the speculation has centered on whether the White House became concerned that Israel would retaliate by blocking progress on its U.S.-mediated talks with Egypt about limited self-government for the occupied territories.

Mr. Evron was known to have met Monday morning with Mr. Mondale and Sol Linowitz, Mr. Carter's special Middle East negotiator. According to reliable sources, the ambassador, while making no overt threats, warned Mr. Mondale and Mr. Linowitz that the UN vote could have serious consequences for the autonomy talks.

After that information was relayed to Mr. Carter, a series of White House discussions began that led to a meeting of Mr. Carter's top foreign policy advisers Monday at 5 p.m. and ended later that night with the issuing of the president's statement.

The 5 p.m. meeting was chaired by Mr. Mondale. About an hour before it began, the sources said, Mr. Evron went to the White House for a second meeting with the vice president and was taken by Mr. Mondale to Mr. Carter's office, where he spoke with the president for about 20 minutes.

Alvin Ailey Held For Observation In N.Y. Assaults

NEW YORK, March 9 (UPI) — Choreographer Alvin Ailey, who police said tried to force his way into Columbia University's International House and assaulted a sanitation man and a guard, has been admitted to Bellevue Hospital for observation, police said yesterday.

Mr. Ailey, founder of the Alvin Ailey Dancers and the American Dance Theater, was treated for minor injuries suffered Friday in scuffles outside the building in upper Manhattan, police said. He was arrested and charged with assault, harassment, disorderly conduct and resisting arrest.

"He evidently wanted to see a friend . . .," said Paul Sziler, the choreographer's manager. "He then evidently got into a fight. Alvin has been under tremendous strain. He needs a long rest."

Mr. Ailey reportedly was attempting to see a former International House resident who no longer lives there. A security patrolman said that when Mr. Ailey left the building, he attacked a sanitation man and, when a security car pulled up, he tried to pull the driver through the window.

Communists' Office Firebombed in Rome

ROME, March 9 (UPI) — Guerrillas today firebombed an office of the Communist Party and tried to bomb a rightist youth center, police said.

They said youths hurling firebombs set fire to a party office in Rome's Gianicolense section and that the office burned to the ground. Explosives experts dismantled a bomb set at the youth center.

Bid Raises Church-State Issue

Hasidic Jews in U.S. See Minority-Business Fund

By Jane Seaberry

WASHINGTON, March 9 (WP) — A petition from a group of Hasidic Jews seeking minority status to qualify for special federal aid has triggered a furor among some blacks, small business groups and some members of Congress.

Rep. Parren Mitchell, D-Md., author of the legislation intended primarily to aid blacks and Hispanics but under which the Hasidic Jews are now seeking relief, is opposing the petition, while some of his colleagues on the House Small Business Committee are supporting it.

The petition has pointed up several sensitive questions concerning rights of religious groups and separation of church and state. It may also open up the minority-benefits fund to other religious and ethnic groups besides blacks, Hispanics, American Indians and Asian Pacific Americans. The last group was classified recently as a socially disadvantaged group.

For example, some Pakistani-Americans and Eastern Indian citizens are considering applying to get into the program, said Carl Bassett, a consultant for the federal Small Business Administration, who is coordinating the Hasidic's case.

"A Limited Pie"

"I see this as a real serious problem," Rep. Mitchell said. "I might be sympathetic toward the economic conditions of the Hasidic Jews . . . But there's a limited pie."

"What happens in terms of separation of church and state?" Rep. Mitchell asked. "This is clearly a religious group. . . . But there's a limited pie."

The Hasidim have received 38 letters of support, including those from Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., and Charles Mathias, R-Md., and Rep. John LaFalce, D-N.Y., a member of the House Small Business Committee, and Geraldine Ferraro, D-N.Y.

Those congressmen who sent letters of support with the Hasidic petition are Sen. Jacob Kevins, R-N.Y., James Howard, D-N.Y., Steven Solarz, D-N.Y., and Leo Zeff, D-N.Y.

In a petition filed with the Small Business Administration, the Has-idic group said that their businessmen are often shunned by others because they "speak halting, broken English compounded by thick accent," and have unique dress, such as side locks, black frock coats, broad-brimmed hats, prayer shawls and white kippahs worn by the men. Married women must wear "special hairpieces," the petition said.

In addition, it said, the ultra-Orthodox Jews have dietary restrictions and follow religious customs that "contrast to an overall image of strange and complement the other differences that set them apart from the rest of the population."

The Hasidim also claim that should not be prohibited from benefiting from the mainstream American business because of religious beliefs and customs, they say are protected under the Constitution. In contrast, the petition said the religion is a matter of choice and is unlike the choice of blacks or Hispanics, who have no choice of skin color or hair background.

Sicily Bridge Project Takes Step Forward

ROME, March 9 (AP) — The Italian government yesterday announced that it had approved the 24 letters in opposition to the project to link Sicily and the mainland by a two-mile bridge would cost more than $1 billion.

The single span to take traffic over the Strait of Messina would be the world's longest suspension bridge at 10,800 feet, more than twice the length of the Verrazano Narrows Bridge, entrance of New York harbor, and authorized formation study group eight years ago. Action had been taken since.

Arab Demand on W. TUNIS, March 9 (UPI) — Arab League's health minister demanded today that the Health Organization move its regional office from Alexandria, Egypt, to Tunisia.

The decision was in response to Egypt's boycott of the League, which last year moved headquarters from Cairo to in retaliation for the Israeli peace treaty.

Situation Forecast for Noon G.M.T. Monday

RIO DE JANEIRO, March 9 (AP)—A nightlong vigil by thousands of persons and a reception committee for a spaceship from Jupiter turned last night's traffic jam early yesterday when space voyagers failed to show up at a farm 75 east of Rio.

Police estimated that about 50,000 people gathered at a farm in Casimiro de Abreu, after Edificio Barbosa, an area rancher, announced on television that a flying saucer would land there at 3:20 yesterday morning.

The committee was to present the Jovians with an encyclopedia "featuring the most complete information about our planet." Instead, it will be given to the town library.

About 350 state and federal highway patrolmen were mobilized to maintain order. After the vigil, one official said, many people voiced frustration and anger, "but nothing really happened. What we had was a big traffic jam." He said that about 4,000 cars, buses and trucks from several Brazilian states had poured into Casimiro de Abreu, a town of 6,000 inhabitants.

PRIVATE PRACTICES

By Linda Wolfe. Simon & Schuster. 317 pp. $9.95.

Reviewed by John Leonard

THEY are brothers, Sydney and Ben Zaubner, and doctors. They share a large practice on the East Side of Manhattan, and are both associated with the same department of obstetrics and gynecology at a New York hospital. Sydney, the older brother and his mother's favorite, is the cleverer one, perhaps brilliant, a darling of the research foundations. He has developed a foolproof birth-control pill that is used in various islands in the Caribbean. Ben is the sad one, who has a "love affair with sleep." He has developed a taste for Nembutal. While Sydney is always going off to deliver a lecture or to be chairman of a medical conference, Ben stays home and sticks, as it were, to his stirrups. "There was so much about himself that he disliked that he was always evaluating himself," the doctor explains.

Most of Linda Wolfe's first novel is written from Ben's point of view. It is a tricky business, and Wolfe—the author of a highly regarded book on adultery, "Playing Around," and a contributing editor to New York magazine—handles it well. It is tricky, because Ben is a man who has little self-awareness. He is defined by his relations with his brother, and those relations are sick. It is just as difficult to sympathize with the masochistic partner in a sadomasochistic relationship as it is to sympathize with the sadistic partner. What we care for in Ben is the possibility that he might change himself. What he changes into is appalling.

Sydney, of course, is heading for a fall. He will be punished for his disdain, for his ambition, for his bullying of his brother and his staff and his patients, and for his sexual humiliation of his wife, Claudia. His birth-control pill is foolproof, all right; the trouble is that those women who stop using it and then become pregnant tend to deliver deformed babies. As the world turns.

Then Sydney, who has been so useful for Ben, who enters into an affair with Naomi, Naomi is divorced, the mother of a small boy, a writer for a newsmagazine and, in her carelessness and her "need to be needed," something of a bohemian spirit. Ben gives up Nembutal for Naomi; we are permitted to hope for the best.

Wolfe, however, is a tough and angry creature. When a foundation cuts off Sydney's financing, he goes in for heavy doses of barbiturates. When Claudia, herself pregnant and out of Sydney's violence, leaves him, he incurs the doctor's perfect storm: never having expe-land beauty makes Naomi a sadistic, and he is no longer a doctor for himself, moves to London. Dependencies are reversed: is transferred from one brother to the other, a kind of plague.

Sydney's disintegration—opened letters, the unpaid life insurance forms he refuses to sign, the candy wrappers and the slugs that the pill-poppers must watch for—turns away from, as if trapped in slow motion, speed, in a fatal accident of vengeance. Sydney's presence at the hospital turns to ash.

There will also be a murder, and perhaps two.

As a novel about brother and brother, "Brooklyn" is the sort of novel all brothers have a right to deny; I've been there, again will. As a novel about medicine, an assault on the emotions, of sharp popping sounds; was obviously been in the classroom and in hysterics; the superb reporter reporting what we don't want to believe, about sadomasochism more ambitious than I have read and more disturbing; it is say on domination; on the and abuse of power.

Sydney and Ben, after all in a sea of needy women. These women need? Assume expertise, a scientist and a doctor.

The erotic is also there: the lover, the respect of society, the "brotherly" touch, the knife, a redeemer. Naomi and Wolfe, these needy women in relation to obstetric and gynecologic medicine as Ben stands. Their passivity is frightful. Not the marriage, not the not the school, not the as the penitentiary, but the where we go naked and the most personal of our actions, and the hospital is an institution of the body, of neediness. Ben turns to "Who are you to ask for without pain?"

"As one would expect in a novel, there is some adultery—the promiscuous awkward, "tremulous" too many smiles on Sydney's face. A like "It would make him stridently to attain additional cease from anxiety" should be reconsidered. But the novel also has great narrative power, an inlaid and an appetite for complex ideas. The adjective I am for is "aspicious."

THE world champion, Anatoly Karpov of the Soviet Union, added another leaf to his laurel wreath by winning the elite Interpolis International Tournament in Tilburg, the Netherlands, with a 76-34 score.

His countryman Grandmaster Oleg Romanishin made a surprisingly strong showing in capturing second prize with 7-4, ahead of the world championship candidate Lajos Portisch, who scored 6½-4, and Grandmaster Gyula Sax, 6-5, both of Hungary.

Player	Final Standings			Points
	Won	Lost	Drawn
Karpov	4	0	7	7½
Romanishin	4	1	0	7
Portisch	2	1	7	6½
Sax	2	2	5	3
Larsen	4	4	5	5½
Spassky	1	1	0	5½
Thomson	2	5	5	5½
Sokolov	2	3	5	5½
Short	2	3	2	5
Hübner	2	3	2	5
Kavalek	0	2	3	4½
Savolien	1	2	3	4½

A tough test for Karpov was his encounter with Grandmaster Gennadi Sosonko of the Netherlands, one of the world's leading amateurs. The game was a tactical struggle on the dragon variation of the Sicilian defense. In a position in which each attacked the other's king, the champion found an unusual way to secure his and won a difficult battle.

After the fine defensive move, 10... P-KR4, recent experience has shown that the attempt to force the kingside breakthrough with 11 Q-Q4, N-K4; 12 B-N3, R-B1; 13 P-N4, P-K4; 14 P-R5 does not have a chance to succeed. Moreover, the preparatory 13 B-R4 is also soundly met by 13... R-B4; 14 Q-B, R-N5; 15 P-R, R-B4; 16 P-N4, Q-BP; 17 K-N1, P-R4; 18 P-R, P-R5.

Therefore, Karpov took the alternative of reading a central breakthrough with 13 B-N5, R-B4; 14 Q-K1, R-K1, refusing for the sake of a small positional gain on the queenside to play the routine 14 K-N1. Giving up the bishops for Sosonko's knights, he drove ahead with 18 P-R5, the point being that 18... P-P5; 19 P-P5;

BKCP: 20 RxB, RxB; 21 N-B3, R-B3; 22 QxB, QxQ; 23 RxB, P-R3; 24 R-B7 would have produced a winning end game for White. Here 19... R-B7, 20 N-B3, R-B7; 21 N-B3, R-B7; 22 PxB, Q-R4; 23 QxB would also not have been sufficient for Black.
 Sosonko's holding firm with 18... B-N2 left Karpov with only a slight advantage that he derived from 19 P-K6, B-B1; 20 P-B3, 21 N-K6, B-B1; 22 R-B7.

On 22... Q-R4, it would have been dubious to play 23 RNP, K-B2; 24 R-K6, BxN; 25 QxB, Q-K.
